Black and Color Teamed This Fall

New Combination Rides the Fashion Chariot.

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Not until one sees with one's very own eyes, the daring with which designers are interpreting the present widely heralded "black teamed with color" theme, does one realize how really thrilling is this new combination.

Do not for a moment entertain the idea that the present fair for black with color is to be accepted in the ordinary sense, for once glimpse the striking manner in which black is made to companion with bold color contrast and you realize that we have with us a vogue that is bringing high drama into fashion's picture. Then too, this new black-with-color gesture answers to a necessity the problem as to "what to wear" at the immediate moment.

In the advance fashion displays there is no type of costume that makes such definite and instant appeal as the two-piece suit that tops a black knife-pleated skirt with a long-torso tunic jacket. Especially when it fastens way over to one side in an eye-arresting buttoned closing. Does this not play up to your wildest flights of imagination as to the play that is being made on color with black?

To cite another instance of color witchery, there is the slim black long-torso dress that has dolman sleeves of vivid green. Then again a simply styled dress has a slenderizing skirt with a stunning jacquard tie top that is seamed to the skirt below the hips, and last, picture a black frock that has a front panel of [illegible] in gay lacquer red.

Dressy Wool Frock

In keeping with a movement now on to create a real "Inter-American" fashion mode, Brazilian and American society recently turned out at a brilliant beauty and fashion revue staged by 20 lovely English models at Copacabana Palace, Rio de Janeiro. Many beautiful costumes shown at this event were designed by couturiers who fled from Paris to London last year.

As a forecast for fall, particular emphasis was given to charming light woolens for dressy afternoon wear, highlighted with touches of beadwork and other embroidery accents. The young frock pictured with its swirl-pleat skirt is of blue sheer wool, embroidered with beads and sequins, was designed by Victor Stiebel for the British Fashion cruise, and typifies a new trend.

Air Mail 3 Years Late Due to Crash in Chile

RICHMOND, VA.—Two air mail letters lost for more than two years after an air liner crashed in the hills of Chile have arrived here from South America almost three years after they were written.

The letters, postmarked June, 1938, bore an explanation in Spanish on the envelopes.

The mail had been lost June 19, 1938, on a flight over the foothills of the Andes. Later the letters were recovered and remailed this time from Santiago, Chile, February, 1941.

Both letters were stamped as diplomatic correspondence from the U. S. embassy at Buenos Aires and were written by Alexander W. Weddell, now ambassador to Spain. One was addressed to Miss Elizabeth Weddell, his sister, and the other to the editor of the Southern Churchman.

"Little Stories for Bedtime" by Thornton W. Burgess

MRS. GROUSE AND JUMPER HOLD THEIR BREATH

Hold your breath and hold it hard.
As Mrs. Grouse and Jumper did.
And learn how close the hunter came
To where a dozen were her dad.

IT WAS very trying. My, my, my, I should say so! It was very trying indeed. Peeping out from under a low growing branch of a hemlock tree Mrs. Grouse and Jumper the Hare watched a man with a terrible gun coming nearer and nearer. Now if it had been Reddy Fox or Old Man Coyote coming Mrs. Grouse would have felt sure that she could trust to her strong wings to take her out of danger and Jumper the Hare that he could depend upon his long legs in case they were discovered. But a man with a terrible gun was a very different matter. Short from that terrible gun could go so much faster than Mrs. Grouse could fly or Jumper could run that they would have very little chance of getting away unhurt, and they knew it.

Nearer and nearer came the hunter, his terrible gun across the hollow of one arm.

Jumper had been comfortably napping for some time.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Grouse, looking very much worried and rather frightened. "I didn't know that anyone was here. I beg your pardon. If you don't mind, I'll rest a few minutes and then I'll try to find some other hiding place."

"No need of it! No need of it at all, Mrs. Grouse," replied Jumper the hardest kind of hard work. With every approaching step of the hunter it became harder. Mrs. Grouse fluttered herself to spring into the air if they should be discovered, shut her mouth tightly and held her breath. Jumper the Hare set his long hind legs under him ready for a sudden jump, laid his long ears back and held his breath.

Nearer and nearer came the hunter, his terrible gun across the hollow of one arm. He looked this way and that way and the other way. He was looking for Mrs. Grouse and she knew it. It seemed to her as if he must hear the thumping of her heart. Her bright eyes grew dark with fear as she watched him. It seemed to her she must simply MUST fly. She couldn't understand how it was possible for that great man to look so happy, for he did look happy, when he was filling others with such awful fear. She almost wished that a great giant would come HIM and shiver and shake with fear so that he might know just how she and Jumper were feeling that very minute.

But frightened as she was, a little bit of gladness crept into her heart. The hunter wasn't Farmer Brown's Boy and she was glad of that. Ever since the terrible time when she was frozen under the icy crust which formed over the snow one night last winter and Farmer Brown's Boy had found her and fed her and been good to her, she had a kindly feeling for him, and somehow, no matter what others said, she had a feeling way down in her heart that never again would he hunt her with his terrible gun as he once had done.

The hunter was so close now that he actually brushed the tip of the hemlock branch under which they were hiding. Would he look under? Mrs. Grouse held her breath and Jumper held his breath and both felt as if they must scream. He was half turning now. Would he look under? If he did, would he be able to kill both of them? Why didn't he go on? But he didn't. He stood still right in front of their hiding-place with his back to them and rested the butt of his terrible gun on the ground.

"I certainly ought to find that grouse somewhere around here," said the man, talking aloud to himself.

(Associated Newspapers—WNU Service.)

Jumper nodded. He had heard the "Bang! bang!" very clearly.

politely. "There is plenty of room for both of us here. It is a good hiding place. I use it a great deal. You seem to be worried about something, Mrs. Grouse. With plenty to eat and no family cares this fine fall weather you ought not to have any worries."

Mrs. Grouse sighed heavily. "True, perfectly true, Brother Jumper," said she. "I ought not to have any worries. I don't believe Old Mother Nature ever intended I should have, no special worries, any way, at this season. This ought to be the glad time for everybody, but nowadays it seems to be the sad time for many of us. Did you hear that terrible gun a little while ago?"

Jumper nodded. He had heard the "Bang! bang!" very clearly, and that was one reason why he was sitting so close under that hemlock branch. Mrs. Grouse suddenly spread her beautiful fan-like tail. There was a gap in it on one side where two feathers were missing. "I lost those when that terrible gun went off," said she, "and it's a wonder that I am here at all to tell about it. If I hadn't managed to get a tree between me and that terrible gun before it went off I probably would be dead this very minute! Worried? I should say I am worried!"

There was a world of sympathy in Jumper's soft eyes as once more he understood. "It's getting so that I'm losing my appetite," continued Mrs. Grouse, "and this is the very time when I should be putting on flesh so as to be in the very best of condition for the winter. I'm sure Old Mother Nature wouldn't allow it if she could help it, but it seems that this is one thing which she cannot help. It isn't right! It isn't fair! Just as if I didn't have worries enough the rest of the year! It's bad enough to have to be on the watch all the time for Reddy and Granny Fox, that fierce old robber the Goshawk, Hooty the Owl, and Old Man Coyote. Why, I need eyes in the back of my head to keep out of their way! In the winter I must work hard to find food enough to keep me from starving. In the spring there is my nest to worry about, and all summer long a big family to watch over and teach to take care of themselves. If anybody ever needed a rest and had earned it, it is I. But here it is, the one season in all the year when there should be nothing to worry about, and along come these hunters with terrible guns, and I don't feel safe a minute while there is daylight. I tell you—listen! Isn't that someone coming this way?"

Jumper peeped out. "It's a man with a gun," he whispered.

Poor Mrs. Grouse shivered and looked more frightened than ever. She half spread her wings as if to fly. "Sit still," whispered Jumper. "Sit perfectly still. He doesn't know we are here, and he won't if we make no noise."

Fall Social Calendar Demands Smart Clothes for the Matron

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THE time is not too far away now when you daughters of the household will engage in the exciting experience of getting off to school in the fall, with a wardrobe tuned to your exact needs and whims. Only please remember you are not the only heroines holding the spotlight in fashion realms. You have rivals, yes indeed!

We are not telling who but here is a tip. Keep an eye on modern mothers, matrons and women in general, who are so importantly carrying on in club work and in social activities that tend to "keep the home fires burning" while college faring daughters are away from home.

Fashion is catering to the costume needs of women with whom "life begins at forty." With unbounded zest and enthusiasm inspired by an ever-increasing appreciation of the tremendous influence smart clothes have, they are achieving new chic and poise. It's no secret or myth, "somebody's mother" presents a lovely "picture" as she graciously presides at the initial autumn meeting of her favorite club. She is glad in the simplest sort of a gown made of fine sheer black wool to which frilly white lingerie accent lends endless charm. In the lovely quaint Victorian bouquet of carnations, violets and stephanotis which she carries so caressingly in her lovely hands, one immediately senses the gallantry of friend husband or a devoted son who, perhaps being out of town, wired to the nearest florist for the prettiest bouquet fancy might picture. Just as an afterthought this dainty bouquet may be a tribute of admiration to their leader from various club members.

The lady seated goes in for ultra modern fashion as you can readily see in her swank gown of hand-some black wool ribbed crepe. This gown with flattering interchangeable accessories. These have a magic way of glorifying their appearance. Chic jewelry, feminizing and lovely lingerie neckwear touches, can do wonders in transforming the entire aspect of your costume. And don't forget flowers! Be sure to wear flowers for that refreshing accent of youthful charm that is always so engearing.

GESTURE

Noun. A motion of the body or limbs; an act of courtesy or diplomacy.

From the large number of questions received by this column about today's word, it is evident that many persons, even those of good education, are not sure whether the first syllable should be like "guess" or like "Jess."

The "g" must have the soft sound of "j" as in gem, not the hard sound of "g" as in get. The second syllable, -ture, as in picture, nature, furniture, signature, literature, etc., may be pronounced either "cher" or "tyoor," but never "chor." The New Webster's gives "cher" as "the natural pronunciation in general use by unaffected speakers."

Correct pronunciation:

First choice: JESS-cher

Second choice: JESS-tyoor

(Capitals indicate syllables to be accented.)

Note: Beau geste is a French term that means a graceful gesture or act intended to be pleasing or conciliatory. Beau rhymes with toe; the "G" in geste has the "zh" sound as in azure.

Correct pronunciation:

boe ZHEST

U. S. S. Silversides

Weave Cable Net To Protect P

Naval Aces Have New For Laying Traps.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Wartime submarines, 200 feet or more from the 12th U. S. Naval district are solving problems of importance and consequence.

Working with a crane, buildings on a hillside overlooking San Francisco bay, three miles field for weaving nets, secured to sand anchors, and 100 miles of heavy steel wire, these nets are fashioning defenses that one day will be used in every major United States harbor as protection against submarine and torpedo-boat attack.

Called the California Cable Net Depot and Training School, specializing in the construction of trapping submarines in the event the situation started from mere inadequate as the science of defense was found to be lacking when a U-boat penetrated Scapa Flow and managed to sink the British battleship Oak.

New type nets are being developed, so are new systems of laying them and keeping them in position.

The nets are weaved by machine, in sections and are stored. When they are to be put to use, the sections are joined by a large clamp.

A crane lifts them out of storage and anchors attached to pull them down to the proper depths. Floats hold the nets while they are being towed to their positions and later serve as buoys.

The defense against the menace of fleet—torpedo boats—consists of floating rafts, similar to log rafts, a system first used in this country during the American Revolution, and is expected to be sufficient protection.

New Liquid Coal Adds t Ship's Cruising Ra

STATE COLLEGE, PA.—A new method of making liquid coal, by which coal is dissolved more completely than ever before, was reported at Pennsylvania State college. The new fluid, when 6 per cent of it is mixed with oil, makes better fire than either coal or oil alone.

The process was discovered by Dr. Walter M. Fuchs, professor of fuel technology. A United States patent has been assigned to him by the Pennsylvania research corporation, an affiliate of the college.

The liquid coal-oil fuel promises to increase the cruising range of ships. Although heat from coal generally is cheaper than that from oil, it is possible to carry more oil than coal on shipboard because it permits better use of bunker space. The coal-oil mixture can be stored under a water seal, thus reducing fire risks, and in event of fire is extinguishing by water is possible.

To make the liquid, bituminous coal is treated with acids to extract what chemists term the coal substance, which is a very complex mixture of hundreds of chemicals. The extraction process of mineral matter and ash, which form the coal substance is called, results in furfural, an inexpensive chemical available from agricultural wastes such as oat hulls, corncobs and bran.

BELLEVILLE, ILL.—The new officer at Scott Field glanced at the young man who appeared before him and said crisply:

"Name?"

"I'm Colonel Yates," the man replied.

The officer got to his feet quickly then said suspiciously:

"Aren't you a little young to be a colonel, sir?"

Yates grinned and handed his identification form, and answered:

"Yes, sir. Colonel is my name."

The officer looked at the form and Mrs. John Yates. West Point, Selectee transferred from Grant."

Police said the furry migrant apparently came out of a circus runs under the Schenectady section.

The patrolman's offer of a pelt for anyone who would take was not accepted.

Railroad Watchdog Dies in Line of Du

It was killed by an automobile while chasing another dog.

TWO YEARS OF WAR

From Peninsula Enterprise

Germany invaded Poland September 1, 1939 and war with Great Britain and France started immediately. The world has seen two terrible years, and the end is far from being in sight.

The first result is that the science of war has been revolutionized. A new style of fighting, commonly known as the blitzkrieg, has conquered many countries. It depends upon armored tanks which burst through enemy lines, and operate far in the rear of opposing armies, and surround great bodies of troops. A great force of planes circle over defending forces and shoot and bomb the life out of them.

The great Maginot line on which France chiefly depended, proved only a trifling factor in the war. New methods made old fortifications of relatively small value. The Maginot line might possibly have held, if the French had extended it to cover the Belgian frontier, which was left poorly defended.

The Nazi triumphs that have amazed the world do not prove that the Nazi mind understands war. To understand war, you have to understand the people you have to meet. Hitler developed fifth column activity to a most amazing extent, but he does not understand the mentality of foreign peoples. He thought Britain and France would refuse to fight when he joined up with Russia. That was a mistake that will probably cost him the war. He thought America would take little part in the war. The stream of bombers flying to England has taught him differently. He thought the Russians could not fight. A million Nazi fighters left dead, wounded, or prisoners on the Russian front have shown he was wrong there.

Two years of war have proved that while Mr. Hitler is a master of blitzkrieg, he does not understand something equally important, the human mind.
